LARW Program Ranked 11th by U.S. News
When Washburn Law developed its oil and gas curriculum nearly a quarter of a century ago, David Pierce, ’77, Norman R. Pozez Endowed Chair in Business and Transactional Law, fostered a first-rate program that remains at the top of its class today. Although much broader in scope and size than its 1989 archetype, the program has never lost its focus to serve the needs of the oil and gas industry as well as the academic needs of our students who choose to pursue that area of law. We are proud to have established a program that offers a complete curriculum, including essential practical experience, to ensure our graduates can address, not just popular trends, but the modern-day issues that comprise all of oil and gas law.

With that in mind, we’ve taken the next logical step by establishing the Oil and Gas Law Center at Washburn University School of Law with Professor Pierce as the Center director. By creating the Center, Washburn Law formally establishes itself as a national leader in oil and gas law, and as such, will expand and deepen its oil and gas-related academic initiatives and scholarship. The Center will also help distinguish us from the few other law schools that have a multi-course oil and gas curriculum. The Center creates an organizational structure that signifies Washburn’s institutional commitment to the oil and gas law discipline, which will assist us in attracting prospective students to the program; obtaining grants to support Center activities; and attracting adjunct professors and practitioners to assist in providing oil and gas law instruction. Our cover story on page 26 features the new Center and Professor Pierce’s philosophy of taking a positive and balanced approach to the curriculum.

Another exciting accolade we received this spring was the ranking of our Legal Analysis, Research, and Writing Program. The program is ranked 11th among all law schools in the U.S. News and World Report’s 2014 Best Graduate Schools ranking. Our program was the only law school speciality program in Kansas and the Kansas City metro area to receive a national ranking for 2014. I invite you to read more law school news, beginning on page 10.

Sincerely,

Tom

PRESIDENT'S LETTER

Alumni Association

There are many exciting things happening at our law school, including plans for the construction of a new law school building to be located on the southeast corner of the campus. To give you a complete and timely update of university developments and law school plans, Washburn University President Dr. Jerry Farley, Dean Tom Romig, and I are visiting several cities in the next few months to meet with law school alumni and friends.

In addition to meeting fellow alumni in your area, these events will provide you with an update on what’s going on at the law school and include a video with a virtual tour of the new law school building. We are pleased that several law school professors and Washburn Foundation President Dr. JuliAnn Mazachek will also be attending several of the events.

Plans for the new building have been met with great enthusiasm. Your alumni board of governors voted unanimously to adopt a resolution supporting the construction of the new facility. The University Board of Regents also voted unanimously to approve construction and a funding plan for the new building.

Look for an invitation in the mail a few weeks before we visit your area. I encourage you to attend and hope to see you soon.

The Kansas Territorial Pipes and Drums led the traditional processional from the law school building to Lee Arena on the Washburn campus for the 108th Washburn University School of Law Commencement the evening of May 11. Professor Myrl L. Duncan, J.S.D., served as grand marshal and Jeffrey D. Jackson, '92, as assistant grand marshal, leading the law students, Jerry B. Farley, Ph.D., president of Washburn University, Dean Thomas J. Romig, guests, and Washburn law professors to the ceremony.

Commencement speakers were: Dean Romig; Associate Dean for Academic Affairs Aïda Alaka; Jill Gillett, '13, president of the Washburn Student Bar Association; and Paul Hoferer, '75, president of the Washburn University School of Law Alumni Association. Board of Regents member William “Bill” Sneed, '80, presented the 2013 Honorary Doctor of Law degree to Stanley C. Sager, '57, who also gave the commencement address. Conferring of degrees was led by President Farley. A champagne reception at Memorial Union to congratulate the graduates followed commencement.

Each academic year, the graduating class votes to honor a member of the faculty as the William O. Douglas Outstanding Professor of the Year. Professor Will Foster received this award. The Honorable C. William “Bill” Ossmann, '77, was chosen by the graduating class as the Adjunct Professor of the Year.

Max Gaither, '53, Delano Lewis, '63, Jim Wright, '63, Jack Black, '63, and Bob Storey, '63, were Golden Alumni guests of the law school and participated in the commencement ceremonies.
During the May commencement, 151 students graduated, and 76 certificates were awarded in the following areas: advocacy, business and transactional law, estate planning, family law, international and comparative law, law and government, natural resources law, and tax law. Twelve students were recognized for their pro bono work.

Correction:
In the Spring/Summer 2012 issue of the Washburn Lawyer, in the Legacy photo section, we incorrectly identified Kyle Steadman, ’95. He is the uncle of Drew Steadman, ’12.
Stanley C. “Stan” Sager, ’57, was born October 17, 1929, in Concordia, Kan., attended schools in Clyde, Kan., and won a Navy scholarship to the University of Kansas upon graduating from Clyde High School. He received a B.A. degree from K.U. in 1951, was commissioned in the Navy, and served in the Pacific and in Japanese and Korean waters during the Korean war. In 1954 he was placed on the Navy retired list, having contracted a paralyzing case of polio while at sea.

Mr. Sager decided to pursue law school while a patient at the Long Beach, California, VA hospital. His first inquiry into possible acceptance by a Kansas law school was rejected since the school said it had no facilities for wheelchairs. An inquiry to Washburn Law met with “Come on, we already have a student in a wheelchair.”

Sager’s application was accepted, and he enrolled. He overcame architectural barriers at the school with the help of students and faculty, who carried him and his wheelchair up and down stairs. He graduated in 1957 with Dean’s honors.

Mr. Sager is a member of the Kansas Bar, the New Mexico Bar, and the bars of the U.S. Tax Court, the Tenth Circuit, and the U.S. Supreme Court. He co-founded and was managing director and chief trial attorney for the law firm of Sager, Curran, Sturges & Tepper, which grew to 23 lawyers with offices in Albuquerque and Las Cruces, N.M., by the time of his retirement in 1993.

Mr. Sager was an associate attorney with the tax and probate firm of Schroeder, Heeney and Groff in Topeka for two years after graduating. During that time he served as volunteer treasurer of the Topeka Council of Churches. He and his family moved to Albuquerque in 1959, where he practiced and gained trial experience with McAtee, Toulouse, Marchiondo, Ruud and Gallagher, a general practice firm. He and a partner left that firm to start their own practice in 1961. In Albuquerque, he was treasurer of the Albuquerque Legal Aid Society, board member of the New Mexico Council of Churches, president of the Child Guidance Center, treasurer and long-time board member of the New Mexico Conference Methodist Foundation, treasurer of the Zia Chapter Paralyzed Veterans of America, building committee chair of The Storehouse, and chaired three building committees for different construction projects for his church. He has been a frequent presenter of construction law seminars for architects and engineers.

He was a New Mexico State Bar Commissioner and chaired the Legal Services for the Elderly Project, a service to rural poor elderly people. He helped take the Project from a local service in Taos to a state-wide program, with over 400 volunteer attorneys. In 2001 the program received state funding, and Governor Gary Johnson appointed Mr. Sager to a commission to administer the fund. For years, Sager also provided free legal advice to three United Methodist bishops and incorporation services to over a dozen churches and other charities.

Mr. Sager served as an adjunct professor for four years in the 1990s, teaching construction law at the University of New Mexico School of Architecture. He chaired the United Methodist denominational Committee on Audit and Review from 1996-2000, chaired the denomination’s legislative Committee on Finance and Administration at its 2000 General Conference, and was given the Judge Woodrow B. Seals award by Perkins School of Theology, SMU, for his work in restructuring denominational finance policies. He has authored two books, ¡Viva Elfego! The Case for Elfego Baca, Hispanic Hero, and Four Corners: Where the Holy Spirit Touches Navajo Hearts, as well as numerous articles on disability issues, professionalism, and New Mexico history. He is currently working on a memoir, tentatively titled Don’t Kill All the Lawyers.

He received the 1987 and 1996 Distinguished Bar Service awards, the 1991 Robert H. LaFollette Pro Bono award, and the 1998 Outstanding Service award. In 1997 Mr. Sager was given the Professionalism Award, the highest honor bestowed by the New Mexico Bar Association, for epitomizing the highest standards of the legal profession. He was designated a Living Archive by the New Mexico Annual Conference of the United Methodist Church. He lives in Albuquerque with his wife of 60 years, Shirley. The couple has funded a professorship in international law at Washburn in memory of their late son, Kurt M. Sager, ’76, a Washburn Law graduate. They have two daughters, Gayle Keenan and Ann Bracken.
LEGAL WRITING PROGRAM AGAIN RANKED AS ONE OF THE BEST IN THE NATION

Washburn University School of Law’s Legal Analysis, Research, and Writing Program (LARW) is ranked 11th among all law schools in the U.S. News and World Report’s 2014 Best Graduate Schools ranking. The LARW program at Washburn Law is the only law school specialty program in Kansas and the Kansas City metro area to receive a national ranking for 2014.

Highlights of the Legal Analysis, Research, and Writing Program at Washburn Law include:

- Focus on preparing students for the actual practice of law
- Professors dedicated to legal writing as one of their primary fields for teaching, scholarship, and service
- Foundation in legal reasoning, research, and oral advocacy

From its inception, the strength of Washburn Law’s LARW program has been its commitment by faculty to provide integrated skills education essential in producing competent, practice-ready graduates committed to serving their clients, the legal profession, and society at large. Our full-time LARW professors co-direct the first-year program and are members of the Association of Legal Writing Directors (ALWD) and the Legal Writing Institute (LWI). As experts in their field, LARW faculty members have shared their teaching expertise with peers at the Free University of Tbilisi in the Republic of Georgia and with visiting Chilean law professors.

Washburn Law legal writing professors regularly teach a seminar session in the Washburn Law Clinic, helping students to make a smooth transition between classroom and practice, and our legal writing students observe oral arguments before state and federal appellate courts.

Fall 2012 Entering Class

The entering class of 2012 includes students from around the world — spanning Arizona to Virginia; New York to California; and from Armenia and Bolivia. Sixty-three percent are from Kansas. They represent 52 different undergraduate schools. The top feeder school is the University of Kansas with 21 undergraduates. There are 11 Kansas State University graduates, followed by Washburn University with 10, and Fort Hays State University and Wichita State University with five each.
Washburn Law Library is among the top 20 law school libraries in the nation, according to an article in the November/December 2012 issue of The National Jurist, a national magazine for law students. The magazine measured 178 law school libraries based upon their collection, facility, and staff resources.

Using data each school reports to the American Bar Association, The National Jurist compared libraries in seven categories: number of volumes and volume equivalents; number of titles; number of serial subscriptions; hours with professional staff on duty each week; facility square footage; number of study seats; and number of computer workstations. The latter three categories were expressed as a ratio to student enrollment.

The four top-rated libraries were at Harvard, Iowa, Texas, and Minnesota. Other top 20 libraries include those at Yale, Northwestern, Virginia, Michigan, Washington & Lee, Ohio State, Georgetown, Stanford, and the University of California, both at Berkeley and Hastings.

Earlier in 2012, an article in the Law Library Journal found Washlaw, the website maintained by the Washburn Law Library, to be the most influential source of legal information available anywhere on the Internet, as measured by the number of sites to which Washlaw links and by the number of sites that link to it.

Spring 2013 Entering Class

Washburn Law’s Spring 2013 entering class is comprised of students with undergraduate degrees in biology, criminal justice, environmental sciences, history, hospital/health care administration, humanities, marketing, political science, psychology, and social sciences. Six students come from out-of-state schools: Cleveland State University, Columbia College-Mo., National American University, University of Nebraska-Omaha, University of Texas-San Antonio, and Wayland Baptist University.

Thirteen students attended Kansas colleges, including Emporia State University, Fort Hays State University, Friends University, Newman College, University of Kansas, Washburn University, and Wichita State University.
Carly McPeak was the inaugural recipient of the Ellis & Judd Outstanding Directed Intern Award. Josh Garrett was selected as the Spring 2013 recipient of the Irvine E. Ungerman Award for Excellence in Clinical Practice.

At the beginning of the semester, McPeak was given a hotly contested divorce case which was complicated by a protection from stalking case and two criminal matters stemming from the actions of the Clinic client’s abusive husband. After negotiating a settlement of the case and preparing to present the terms at pretrial, McPeak was advised moments before the hearing that the settlement was off. Trial was set with less than three weeks to prepare.

“Carly did a masterful job preparing for the hearing,” said Associate Professor Lynette Petty, who presented the award to McPeak. “She dealt with multiple issues at trial, including debt and property division, child support, distribution of tax refunds, and parenting time. Carly pored over mounds of evidence to determine which documents should be introduced during trial. Her direct required a skillful telling of a complicated story over emotional details of the events that had transpired. While our client’s income was limited, Carly worked with the facts she had to show the Court that our client could cashflow the mortgage on the house and pay the debts to cover her husband’s equity.

Petty continued, “To add to Carly’s challenges, the Respondent was represented by a very experienced attorney known for his trial work and ability to effectively cross examine witnesses. Carly more than held her own. Her preparation paid off for her client who ultimately prevailed on every issue.”

“Carly McPeak has definitely earned her award,” said Petty.

Josh Garrett was presented with the Ungerman Award by Associate Professor Rebecca Woodman.

“There was one intern in particular whose clinic work this semester, in our judgment, best exemplifies the spirit of the Ungerman Award,” said Woodman. “For most of the semester, Josh represented one client in several cases. Soon after the semester started, he was confronted with a motion to revoke a diversion in a prior case involving possession of alcohol and drug paraphernalia, based on a new DUI charge. In preparing for the hearing on the motion to revoke, Josh discovered that the stipulated facts underlying the diversion agreement were insufficient to establish one of the charges beyond a reasonable doubt.

“At the hearing,” Woodman continued, “Josh exercised great judgment, initiative and skillful advocacy in presenting and arguing this legal defect to the court, and thus precluded his client from being found guilty on that charge. He then represented his client in a Department of Revenue administrative hearing that arose in conjunction with the DUI charge. He did a masterful job in examining the arresting officer to set the stage for the defense of his client on the DUI. That defense included the filing of a motion to suppress the evidence against the client due to a lack of probable cause to arrest, which was heard by the district court just last week.

“Josh’s careful preparation and research was evident in his performance at the hearing, and he exhibited great skill in cross-examining the State’s witnesses and presenting closing argument to the court. The court granted the motion to suppress in part, which now sets the stage, not only for the upcoming jury trial, but for a potential appellate issue arguing that the evidence remaining after the court’s suppression order is insufficient to establish probable cause for the arrest. In our view, Josh exhibited the highest level of professional skill, judgment and advocacy during each stage of his Clinic representation, and he deserves special recognition,” Woodman said.
A child is brought across the border, carried in the arms of his mother. The family settles in Topeka and makes a home for themselves. The child grows up speaking English, attending public schools, making friends, playing sports, learning and enjoying American culture. For all intents and purposes, the child – now a young man – is American. Except he isn’t. He is undocumented and could be removed from this country and sent back to a place he does not know. He is a Dreamer. He dreams of one day being able to work and live in the United States without fear of removal.

While surveys show a majority of Americans are sympathetic to this young man’s situation and would be in favor of some form of immigration relief for the Dreamers, Congress has not approved legislation to revise the immigration code. On June 15, 2012, President Obama issued a controversial administrative policy allowing Dreamers to apply for deferred action. The Department of Homeland Security was directed to exercise, as appropriate, prosecutorial discretion for those who are approved and not use enforcement resources on these low priority cases. With deferred action also comes eligibility for employment authorization.

The Law Clinic represents young people applying for deferred action as Dreamers. Eligibility requires proof of the following:

- Being less than 31 years old on June 15, 2012.
- Having come to the U.S. before the age of 16.
- Being physically present in the U.S. now and on June 15, 2012.
- Entering the U.S. without inspection before June 15, 2012 or having lawful immigration status expired as of that date.
- Having graduated from high school or obtained a GED, being in school or a GED program now, or being honorably discharged from military service in the U.S.
- Not having a felony conviction, significant misdemeanor, or three or more misdemeanors and not posing a threat to national security.

Interns in the Law Clinic help clients gather documentation to prove the elements of their case and file all of the necessary forms for deferred action. As one can imagine, it is not always easy to come up with an actual document to prove you have been in the United States every month since 2007 or even that you were actually here on the exact day of June 15, 2012. All of these documents must be organized in a logical way to make sure immigration officials will see that each element is met.

Working with Dreamers has been a rewarding experience for our interns. Our clients are grateful for the representation as they navigate an immigration system that can be very intimidating to someone who must come forward and openly reveal his undocumented status.
While admitting that her last semester in law school was a marathon, recent graduate Christi Somers, ‘13, says she could not imagine searching for a job as a prosecutor without the practical experience she gained the past year through her internship with the Shawnee County District Attorney’s office.

She has successfully completed her second jury trial, one that included one count of domestic battery and one count of interference with a law enforcement officer. Somers said she handled the case on her own, from voir dire to sentencing.

“I know what I’m doing,” said Somers. “I can handle it. I’m prepared. I can step into any district attorney or county attorney’s office and know how to handle a case from day one until it’s over.

“I felt confident going in. I thought it was a pretty solid case although there were quite a few obstacles with it. There was an eye-witness so basically it came down to if the jury would believe the eye-witness. Going into deliberations I wasn’t quite sure how they would go. I couldn’t really tell throughout the trial what the jury was feeling. I was really surprised. I got the guilty on the domestic battery but not on the interference count. The domestic battery is the top charge so it was the one we were really wanting. And I offered a plea to defense prior to the trial and basically the outcome was exactly what the plea would have been. I wish I could have gotten him guilty on both counts, but it made me feel reassured that I offered a decent plea for what the case was and the evidence we had. And for the jury to return almost exactly the same verdict. That was pretty crazy.

“I really don’t understand how someone can start as a prosecutor without completing an internship like this because you really learn everything that law school can’t teach you: how to deal with defense counsel, how to deal with issues that may arise, how to deal with judges — things like that.”

Somers has worked for the Shawnee County District Attorney’s office since May 2012 after participating in the on-campus interview process at Washburn Law, coordinated by the Professional Development Office (PDO).

“The PDO is there to help you in any fashion that you need. They bring the district offices onto campus so you can interview with all of them in the same day. It makes it really convenient for the students’ schedules and I think it helps the district attorneys’ offices too, because they can come and just interview a bunch of people at once. They have the on-campus interview and then they do call backs in some of the offices so you have multiple opportunities to get hired someplace. They really help. And afterwards if they know you are interested in the prosecution they can help look for employers or alumni who can help connect you with potential employers,” Somers said.

AHRENS EARNS KANSAS ASSOCIATION FOR JUSTICE RAYMOND SPRING AWARD

Amy Ahrens, ’12, was the Spring 2013 recipient of the Kansas Association for Justice Raymond Spring Award. This award is given to the Law Clinic intern who has demonstrated the highest commitment to providing legal services to clients in need. The Kansas Association for Justice Raymond Spring Award was established in remembrance of Raymond Spring, ’59, former professor and dean of the law school.

While in clinic, Ahrens represented clients in a variety of domestic and criminal cases. In one case, she worked long hours on a post-conviction petition that remained pending beyond her clinic semester. Ahrens wanted to see the case through, so she volunteered her time in the clinic during the holiday break and spring semester in order to fulfill her professional responsibility to her client. Ahrens’ supervising attorney, Professor Aliza Organick, remembers her as “dependable, hardworking and, overall, a terrific student.”

Tim Belsan, ’09, was recently named the 2012 U.S. Department of Justice Civil Division Rookie of the Year. This elite award is given “in recognition of exceptional performance and notable contributions toward the Division’s mission by any employee with fewer than three years of service with the Division, and fewer than five years overall Federal service.”

While attending law school, Belsan was editor-in-chief of the Washburn Law Journal and later worked as a law clerk for the Honorable Deanell Reece Tacha with the United States Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit before joining the U.S. Department of Justice. He is a member of the Kansas, Missouri, and Tenth Circuit bars.

Henke, ’12, Elected District Magistrate Judge

Renee Henke, May 2012 Washburn Law graduate, was elected as district magistrate judge in Kansas’ 17th Judicial District, Division 4. Henke is based in Downs, Kan., in the north central part of the state.

After winning the Democratic primary in August, Henke defeated Richard E. Linton in the Nov. 6 general election, garnering 59 percent of the vote. Henke campaigned door-to-door and said she was pleasantly surprised that her youth was viewed as a strength. She said that most people “liked to see someone young moving back to the area, using their education and coming back and trying to help build the community and maybe encourage other young people to come back here as well.”

In preparing for her position, Henke worked closely with current Magistrate Judge Jacqueline Thornton and spent time shadowing 17th Judicial District Judge Preston Pratt. As a district magistrate, Judge Henke has jurisdiction over traffic infractions and cigarette or tobacco infractions as well as criminal misdemeanors and juvenile cases. She has authority to conduct preliminary hearings, arraignments in criminal felonies, and jurisdiction over probate matters.

While in law school, Henke was a law clerk with Irigonegaray & Associates; a teaching assistant for Legal Analysis, Research, and Writing; and secretary for the Washburn Student Bar Association.

Lautt, ’12, Wins Supreme Court Case 22 Days After Bar Admittance

Steven A. Lautt, May 2012 graduate, argued his first case before the North Dakota Supreme Court 22 days after being sworn in and won the case when the Court issued its opinion in Hamilton v. Woll on Nov. 27.

At issue was the important oil and gas principle of whether certain conveyance language creates a “royalty” interest or a “mineral” interest; the distinction can have significant financial and development ramifications. Lautt was successful for his client by convincing the Court to overturn an adverse summary judgment to allow consideration of extrinsic evidence to interpret an oil and gas conveyance. As a result of the Court’s remand, Lautt is handling his first trial in district court.

Lautt says the critical balance of confidence and humility learned at Washburn Law has helped him navigate law practice upon graduation.

“The most important idea that Washburn Law teaches its students is the appropriate balance of confidence and humility. Law school graduates in their first year of practice certainly don’t know all the answers, but Washburn graduates can be confident that the instruction they received during law school will allow them to find the answers and effectively argue on a client’s behalf.”

Lautt works at the Pringle & Herigstad Law Firm in Minot. While attending Washburn Law, he was a staff writer for the Washburn Law Journal and president of the Federalist Society for Law and Public Policy Studies.
In front of a packed courtroom filled with friends, family, colleagues, and former students, Professor James M. Concannon received the Justice Award from the Kansas Supreme Court during a special session on Friday, Dec. 14, 2012. The award — the Court’s highest — is given to recognize persons or organizations that have contributed significantly to the improvement of justice in Kansas. Linda Elrod, ’72, Washburn University School of Law Richard S. Righter Distinguished Professor of Law, and David Heinemann, ’73, a Topeka attorney who served as a legislator from Garden City for 27 years, presented Concannon to the Court. Both shared their professional and personal stories of Concannon and his positive impact on his many students, colleagues, family, and friends.

“I have never wanted to attend my own funeral, and now it really seems that no purpose would be served,” Concannon joked in response to their comments.

The Court recognized Concannon for his career-long service to the legal community and, in particular, the courts. Among his principal activities for the improvement of justice in Kansas, Concannon has been a member of the Pattern Instructions for Kansas Civil and Criminal Committees since 2001 and the Judicial Council’s Civil Code Advisory Committee since 2008. That committee, among other activities, restyled and revised the first three articles of the Kansas Code of Civil Procedure and revised time computation standards throughout the Kansas Statutes Annotated.

Concannon was a member of the Supreme Court Rules Advisory Committee, from 2010 to 2012, when the Supreme Court adopted sweeping changes to the rules attorneys follow in court cases. A long-time advocate of keeping courts out of politics, Concannon has served on the Kansas Commission on Judicial Performance since 2006. He has represented Kansas on the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws since 1998.

Concannon served as dean of Washburn University School of Law from 1988 to 2001, and has since served as a Distinguished Professor of Law. In 2013, he was named the Senator Robert J. Dole Distinguished Professor of Law. Before serving as dean, he had been a member of the law school faculty since 1973. Concannon has authored numerous chapters and legal treatises. His detailed history of Washburn Law from its founding in 1903 to 2003, entitled, “The Ideal Place...for the Establishment of a Great Law School”: History of Washburn Law School 1903-2003, was published in June 2012 by the Washburn University School of Law Alumni Association.

Recipients of the Justice Award receive an engraved plaque and a $500 stipend. In addition, a permanent plaque listing the names of recipients is on public display in the Judicial Center just outside the courtroom. The stipends have been awarded from earnings on a $10,000 check the Court received in 1987, when its program to reduce delay in the courts was recognized by the Foundation for the Improvement of Justice, a national organization founded by the late James W. Chapman, of Atlanta. Kansas was the first state to establish specific time standards for disposing of cases for each of five major case categories. Numerous statements have followed up such time standards and guidelines.

Any Kansan or Kansas organization, except members of the Supreme Court and their personal staff and the members of the Justice Awards Nominating Committee, is eligible for the award. Washburn Law alumni Justice Award past recipients include Robert A. Cobean, ’35; Jack R. Euler, ’53; Gerald L. Goodell, ’58; Judge Jerry L. Mershon, ’61; Paul E. Wilson, ’40; and Arno Windscheffel, ’34. Other recipients of the award include: Kenneth Bronson, Rev. Wardell A. Chambers, Lewis L. Ferguson, Marion County Extended Learning, Justice David Prager, and Judge Herbert W. Walton.
PROFESSOR GLASHAUSSER RECEIVES 52 AWARD

At the annual advocacy awards banquet, students presented Professor Michael Kaye with a bobblehead that resembled both him and Professor Myrl Duncan.

PROFESSOR PIERCE HONORED BY RMMLF

Professor David Pierce, ’77, was presented with the 2012 Clyde O. Martz Teaching Award from the Rocky Mountain Mineral Law Foundation on July 19, 2012. The award recognizes excellence in teaching natural resources law and fostering of a broad understanding of the law, mentoring of students, and an innovative teaching style.

PROFESSOR ALEX GLASHAUSSER RECEIVES 52 AWARD

Professor Alex Glashausser was presented with the 52 Award from the Washburn Law Journal. This year, the Volume 52 Board of Editors realized the need to recognize the pivotal role that the Washburn Law faculty plays in ensuring the success of the Washburn Law Journal. For this reason, the Board created this award, the “52.” The 52 honors a faculty member who goes above and beyond the call of duty to assist the Journal, the Board of Editors, and student writers. Although the outstanding service, dedication, wise advice, and priceless insight of the 52’s recipient cannot fully be repaid, he will be honored by a travelling trophy and enough red pens to survive the next year’s volume.

PROFESSOR BAHADUR NAMED CLEO CONSULTANT

Professor Rory Bahadur has been selected the National Academic Curriculum Consultant by the Council on Legal Education Opportunity (CLEO), a division of the American Bar Association. CLEO was founded in 1968 as a non-profit project of the ABA Fund for Justice and Education to expand opportunities for minority and low-income students to attend law school. In his role as consultant, Professor Bahadur will be assisting CLEO with program development and oversee all of CLEO’s programming for entering and first-year law students. He will be training CLEO faculty at schools hosting CLEO Summer Institutes, hiring and training a team of CLEO Regional Curriculum Consultants, and teaching minority and economically disadvantaged law students to be expert, self-regulated learners.

Professor Bahadur joined the Washburn Law faculty in 2007 and was voted Professor of the Year in 2010 and 2012. He currently teaches Torts, Civil Procedure, Admiralty and Maritime Law, and Federal Courts and presents nationally on teaching methods and techniques.
Andrea J. Boyack joined Washburn Law after serving as a visiting professor at Fordham University School of Law, George Washington University School of Law, and Catholic University of America Columbus School of Law. Prior to entering academia, Professor Boyack practiced corporate and real estate law for 13 years in New York City and the Washington, D.C. area with Reed Smith; Fried, Frank, Harris, Shriver & Jacobson; Orrick, Herrington & Sutcliffe; Goodwin Proctor; and O’Melveny & Myers. Jessup International Moot Court Competition. After law school, Professor Boyack clerked for Judge John Gleeson of the U.S. District Court, Eastern District of New York. Professor Boyack has written and presented on issues relating to the housing crisis, the secondary mortgage market, and common interest community governance. Her current scholarship focuses on transactional freedom and individual liberties in the context of real property development and control, including issues regarding society’s optimal allocation of risk, costs, power, and resources.

Emily Grant began teaching legal writing courses at her alma mater, the University of Illinois College of Law, where as a student she served as Articles Editor for the Illinois Law Review. She joined the University of Kansas School of Law faculty as a part-time lecturer in the Lawyering Program. Later Professor Grant was named as a full-time lawyering professor while also working with students as part of the Academic Resources Program. Before transitioning to a teaching career, Professor Grant was senior court counsel for the Palau Supreme Court, which serves the small island nation located in the Pacific Ocean. She also clerked at the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit, the U.S. District Court for the Central District of Illinois, and the U.S. District Court for the District of Kansas.

Frédéric Sourgens’ teaching and scholarship focus on international dispute resolution, with a particular emphasis on resolution of disputes involving political risk. He has published numerous articles on international arbitration and serves as editor for the Oxford University Press reporter of investor-state arbitral decisions. Prior to joining Washburn Law, Professor Sourgens practiced international arbitration in the Washington, D.C. office of Milbank, Tweed, Hadley & McCloy and the Houston office of Fulbright & Jaworski and worked as counsel in ICSID, UNCITRAL, ICC and LCIA arbitrations representing diverse clients such as Yukos Oil Company, Fraport AG, the Government of Mongolia, and U.S. private equity and financial services companies. While in Washington, D.C., he was an adjunct professor of law at Georgetown University Law Center and, in 2010, received the Georgetown University Law Center Council of Barristers Inaugural Alternative Dispute Resolution Award for Coaching Excellence.

Rebecca E. Woodman began as an adjunct professor at Washburn Law in 2007, teaching courses on capital punishment and wrongful convictions. Prior to joining the Washburn faculty as a visiting professor, Woodman was with the Capital Appellate Defender Office in Topeka, Kan., where she represented death row inmates on direct appeal, habeas corpus petitions, and petitions for certiorari. She twice argued Kansas v. Marsh (2006), a case involving the constitutionality of the Kansas death penalty, in the Supreme Court of the United States. Professor Woodman has also served as amicus counsel in the Supreme Court. During her work as an appellate defender, Woodman litigated numerous capital and non-capital cases on appeal and in the district courts. Previously, she was a staff attorney to the Kansas Sentencing Commission. Professor Woodman has published several articles on issues related to criminal law, including the death penalty, the insanity defense, and international criminal law.
Five Washburn Law professors have been honored for their excellence in teaching by alumni and supporters who have endowed positions that provide funding for professional development and research.

David Pierce, ’77, and William Rich are first-time holders of five-year endowed chairs, while James Concannon and Amy Deen Westbrook are first-time holders of five-year endowed professorships. Linda Henry Elrod, ’72, was reaffirmed as holder of an endowed professorship.

“These endowments recognize the outstanding work of our professors in their teaching and in their overall contributions to Washburn Law and the legal community,” Dean Thomas Romig said. Endowed positions provide funds that are available to the professors to enhance their instructional programs, to fund research projects, and to advance their overall scholarly work.

“To be a top law school we must have the best talent. Endowed faculty professorships and chairs make it possible to recruit and retain talented academicians,” Romig added. “Washburn Law is extremely grateful to the donors and their commitment to the future of our law school.”

David Pierce, Norman R. Pozez Chair in Business and Transactional Law

Professor Pierce has been named the Norman R. Pozez Chair in Business and Transactional Law endowed by Norman R. Pozez, who graduated from Washburn Law in 1980. It is awarded to a faculty member who has made extraordinary contributions to the law school primarily in the area of teaching and who is a traditional academic and/or an individual with prominence in the chosen field of study, with preference given to a professor in the area of Business and Transactional Law.

Pierce has been the energy behind Washburn Law’s oil and gas program, teaching many of the core courses since its inception in 1989. He has continued to elevate the program through his publications and his work with the Rocky Mountain Mineral Law Foundation, where he served as president and from which he recently received the Clyde O. Martz Teaching Award. He previously served as the director of the Business and Transactional Law Center and now serves as director of the Oil and Gas Law Center. Before joining academia, Pierce worked in-house for Shell Oil Company in Houston, Texas, as of-counsel for the Gable & Galtwals law firm in Tulsa, Okla., and for the Shughart Thomson & Kilroy law firm in Kansas City, Mo. He earned a master of laws from the University of Utah College of Law and is a Washburn Law graduate.

Bill Rich, James R. Ahrens Chair in Torts and Constitutional Law

Professor Rich has been named the James R. Ahrens Chair in Torts and Constitutional Law endowed by the law firm of Michaud, Cordry, Michaud, Hutton and Hutton, named in honor of former Washburn Law professor James R. Ahrens. Rich, who has served as acting dean and interim dean during his tenure at Washburn Law, teaches Constitutional Law, Constitutional Litigation, Civil Liberties, and Jurisprudence. For several years he worked with Washburn Law Clinic students representing inmates in constitutional challenges to Kansas prison conditions. Before joining the Washburn Law faculty, he was a law clerk for Chief Justice Donald Wright of the California Supreme Court and he served as a staff attorney at the Legal Aid Society of Wichita. Rich’s publications address a wide range of constitutional law topics, including federalism, sovereign immunity, prison conditions, and race relations. He received a law degree from the University of California at Berkeley, Boalt Hall School of Law.
Linda Henry Elrod, Richard S. Righter Distinguished Professor of Law

Professor Elrod has been reaffirmed as the Richard S. Righter Distinguished Professor of Law, which was created by a gift from the Richard S. Righter Trust and is awarded to a faculty member who has made extraordinary contributions to the law school primarily in the areas of teaching, scholarship, and service. Righter became a partner in the Kansas City law firm of Lathrop, Crane, Sawyer, Woodson & Righter, which evolved into Lathrop, Woodson, Righter, Blackwell & Parker. She is past chair of the American Bar Association Family Law Section; served as co-chair of the ABA Child Custody and Adoption Pro Bono Advisory Board; and has been editor of the American Bar Association Family Law Quarterly since 1992. Elrod graduated from Washburn University School of Law in 1972.

The professorship is awarded to a faculty member considered to be an excellent teacher, who may be a traditional academic or an individual with prominence in the field of law — Concannon has achieved both. His leadership as dean shepherded Washburn Law for more than a decade from 1988 to 2001. His career-long service and dedication to the legal community, in particular the courts, was recognized in December 2012 by the Kansas Supreme Court, which presented him with its Justice Award. After receiving a law degree from the University of Kansas School of Law, Concannon served as a law clerk in the Office of the Kansas Attorney General and the Office of the Kansas Insurance Commissioner and as a research attorney for Justice Alex Fromme of the Kansas Supreme Court. He joined the Washburn Law faculty in 1972.

Professor Westbrook has been named the Kurt M. Sager Memorial Distinguished Professor of International and Commercial Law, which was established by Stan, ’57, and Shirley Sager in memory of their son Kurt Sager, ’76, who died in 1998 at the age of 44. It is awarded to a faculty member considered to be an excellent teacher, who may be a traditional academic or an individual with prominence in the field of law, with preference given to a professor in the area of International or Commercial Law.

Westbrook’s teaching and research focus on financial, international, and transactional subjects. Westbrook is the director of the Business and Transactional Law Center at Washburn Law. She received a law degree from Harvard Law School in 1992.
In the Spring 2011 issue of the Washburn Lawyer, we introduced readers to Rebecca Woodman, ’87, visiting associate professor of law, her Wrongful Convictions class, and their investigation of the Ronald “Ronnie” Rhodes case. Rhodes was convicted in 1981 of murder in Wichita but has maintained his innocence. In April 2008, Rhodes filed a motion for DNA testing in his case, hopeful that technology widely used now but not available at his trial might prove his innocence. In fall 2009, Woodman and her students joined forces with Ron Sylvester, formerly of the Wichita Eagle, to examine the Rhodes case after finding inconsistencies in docket reports. Unfortunately, evidence that could potentially be tested for DNA in the case to help answer questions brought forth by Woodman, Sylvester, the Wichita Eagle, and the Washburn Law students, has been either destroyed or misplaced.

Released on parole in August 2012, Rhodes spoke to Woodman’s students about his experience, the role he believes the Wrongful Convictions class, Woodman, and Sylvester played in securing his parole, and his future. Also in attendance was Janet Weiblen, a pastor in the Kansas City area who befriended Rhodes during her work with the prison ministry, Reaching Out From Within, which teaches social skills to inmates.

RONNIE RHODES: ON THE OUTSIDE

Last in a series by Vicki Estes
Ronnie Rhodes described his first main meal outside prison walls. “It was a lovely dinner with Janet (Weiblen) and my mentor. We had roast pork, mashed potatoes and squash, and a spinach salad with mandarin oranges and avocados. And a drink—sangria—non-alcoholic of course,” Rhodes recalled with a smile. The meal was in stark contrast to his original wish for a basic bacon, lettuce, and tomato sandwich. He said he thought better of it after someone told him he was crazy to want to eat a sandwich on his first day out of prison after 31 years.

Rhodes was paroled in August 2012 after eight unsuccessful attempts before the Kansas Parole Board beginning in 1996. He says the parole board gave a different reason each time for not releasing him or they required that he complete new goals. One time, he says the parole board told him he would need to quit smoking before they would consider his release. “I got one reason and that was to develop a no-smoking plan,” he chuckled. “And follow it—cigarettes that is,” he added to clarify.

“I’m telling you every time I saw the next board it was a different board. So I could never get a leg up.”

Rhodes believes the only way he would have been released sooner was if he were to confess the crime, something he often felt pressured to do. “Every time, because, you see, in Kansas parole is grace. It’s not a right. It’s a privilege, and it’s these three powerful people that grant you this privilege. They expect for those of us who are asking for this hand of grace to show remorse for what we had done. I couldn’t admit to something I didn’t do.”

So for 31 years Rhodes did the drill, met with the parole board, listened to what they had to say and then, after being denied, awaited his next hearing. “And if they’d have kept me there for 30 more years I would have just been there ’cause I didn’t kill this guy. I’m sorry he’s dead. But I didn’t kill him.”

In an attempt to eliminate the racial disparity existing in the indeterminate method of sentencing felons, the Kansas Legislature instituted the 1993 Kansas Sentencing Guidelines. Most inmates in the Kansas prison system today have defined sentence lengths based on those guidelines. However, more than 700 inmates, like Rhodes, incarcerated before the guidelines took effect, must go before the parole board once they are eligible. In 2011 a prisoner review board replaced the parole board.

“I believe that with the prison review board my story became more important. It scared ’em,” Rhodes said.

After being passed up for parole again in 2011, Rhodes recalled Weiblen’s suggestion that he maintain a low profile and cease talking about the case. “Like Janet has always told me, ‘No matter what, Ronnie Rhodes, these people are not going to say they were wrong.’”

“There was a lot of publicity about this case and a lot of pressure not only on D.O.C. officials but on the Wichita police department to release records they were refusing to release. And even on the parole board before it became the prisoner review board to release records that they had refused to release because there was public pressure to do so,” Woodman explained to the students. “I think it was very prudent for Ronnie to keep quiet for a while. It had the desired effect in the long run, but it had reached a critical mass.”

Professor Woodman explains the Rhodes case to students.

Rhodes believes the publicity generated by the investigation prompted the prisoner review board to examine his case. “It caused them to read the facts of the case, that there’s a problem, and it’s not Ronnie Rhodes saying there’s a problem. It’s people working that have a career, as a lawyer, or newspaper reporter. It’s these people saying there’s a problem,” Rhodes said. “Make no mistake. That is the reason I am out of prison and I will never forget that, ever.”
Rhodes was abruptly transferred in December 2011 from Lansing, where he had spent 19 years, to Hutchinson a month after the Washburn Law Clinic filed a petition for clemency to Gov. Sam Brownback and sought signatures for a petition. Department of Corrections officials did not offer a reason for the transfer, which at the time was devastating for Rhodes, who had secured a job working in the kitchen in his unit at Lansing. In hindsight, however, Rhodes believes the move was for the best and that it accomplished his goal to blend in with the prison population. “To some extent they accomplished that for me because they transferred me from Lansing to Hutch. So they kind of sent me underground.”

“Reaching Out from Within, formerly known as Stop the Violence, had a profound impact on Rhodes since its introduction to Lansing inmates in May 2004. “It became my breath. That program became what I needed to pattern my life by. They became my family and my support team. And I love ‘em.”

At that moment, Rhodes fought back tears. “I love ‘em, and um, so I wanted to be where…” With his face buried in his hands, he wept and then quickly apologized. “I told myself I wasn’t gonna do this. I wanted to be with my family so that is why I didn’t go back to Wichita.”

“Freedom has not brought Rhodes the sense of independence one would expect. In fact, Rhodes says he has encountered the opposite.

“In prison, I was in control of what I did, dependent on no one but myself.” Now, Rhodes tackles the uncertainties life in the modern world presents, exacerbated by 30 years of technology upgrades.

Most difficult for Rhodes is facing situations where he has to remind himself that he doesn’t know the answer. “I’m having a difficult time. I’ve been out for eight days and I’m having a difficult time. The cell phone is killing me really, and the computer,” Rhodes admitted. His cell phone rang while in the midst of his dialogue with the students, prompting giggles from the crowd. After a quick, “I’ll call you back,” he returned his focus on the students.

“My problem is wanting to master everything right now. I’m trying to make up for lost time and am in a hurry to catch up.”

Originally from Wichita, Rhodes says his family is now here, motioning to Woodman and Wieblen. Rhodes chose not to parole to his hometown, saying he wouldn’t have survived there, afraid that someone with an axe to grind might try to get him thrown back in jail.

“‘I’m under old law and under parole so if someone calls my parole officer and says something like, ‘Well, he’s drinking,’ I’m going to jail. Until they sort it out, I’m going to jail. OK, yeah, bring his black ass back this way; we got something for him.”

Rhodes earned a paralegal degree while in prison and is hopeful he can use it someday to help others. When asked by a student what he would change if he could change one thing in the legal system, Rhodes seemed pensive.

“I think that bad convictions come from the initial investigation. I think that the police officers, detectives in particular, when they are investigating a particular crime, they should be a little more thorough...” his voice trailed.

“When they've got a witness who has blood all over them?” Woodman interjected.

At press time, Rhodes was living in a faith-based Oxford House planning his next steps, but navigating them one at a time. He explained his desire to regain freedom and to be on his own, yet is he aware that he needs time to adjust to his new life outside prison.

“Oh, I am ready” — you tell yourself that but you're not ready. But when I am able, other people will help me validate that I am ready.”

As Rhodes’ discussion with the class came to a close, Woodman reflected on the investigation and a conversation she recalled having with her Wrongful Convictions class about the final transcripts of Rhodes’ case.

“The trial's transcripts pretty clearly show that at the end of the case, when all of the evidence had been presented and the jury began to deliberate, the defense attorney and the judge believed that Ronnie was going to be found not guilty based upon the evidence that was presented at trial,” Woodman recalled.

“Ron [Sylvester] actually talked to the court reporter, who was one of the few people from this case who were still around the Sedgwick County Courthouse, and she remembered Ronnie's trial and she was shocked that Ronnie had been found guilty.”

So how was Rhodes found guilty in light of what Woodman, the students, and Sylvester uncovered?

“How? I'm not going to pull the race card,” Rhodes said. But Weiblen will.

“Well I’m gonna pull the race card because I’ve read what you (Rebecca) came up with and there was only one viable suspect as far as I can tell. And we're talking about probably someone well connected who happened to be white. I really think the race card was a major factor in that. I really do and I've always thought it was,” Weiblen explained.

If ever found, the missing evidence in the case could eventually exonerate Rhodes. “When we looked at evidence custody receipts, there was no record of that evidence having been destroyed. So, it might still be out there,” Woodman suggested.

Rhodes quickly replied, “But I’m not getting ready to hold my breath on that. I've got to get back to living.”
The oil and gas industry has always been a multifaceted legal and regulatory environment in which to operate. Rapid growth and change aptly describe the energy industry today. Recent discoveries of oil and shale gas, and the accompanying environmental scrutiny, have created an increased need for lawyers with experience in the energy sector. Law graduates interested in pursuing oil and gas law require a working knowledge of all aspects of the industry, to include the complex property and contract relationships created to develop the resource, and the equally complex mix of environmental and business regulations. Washburn Law’s oil and gas program provides a targeted curriculum beneficial to students and to an industry seeking to hire well-qualified law graduates.

“During the past 20 years many law schools have abandoned oil and gas courses, often retiring the discipline with the professor who taught the course,” said David Pierce, Norman R. Pozez Chair in Business and Transactional Law and Professor of Law. “To them, having an oil and gas program did not fit with their environmental programs. Oil and gas law was way too capitalist. Our program takes a positive approach to the subject matter because it’s not necessarily pro-industry but it’s certainly not anti-industry. We are training the future lawyers the industry will need to do business effectively. We are training the future lawyers governmental agencies will need to effectively regulate the industry.”

The program that began with three core courses has expanded three-fold over the years, adjusting its curriculum to address topical environmental perspectives, emerging energy sources, and changing regulations. As a reflection of the law school’s commitment to the program, it recently announced the establishment of the Oil and Gas Law Center to provide a structure for the existing oil and gas curricula. The Oil and Gas Law Center is the law school’s fifth Center for Excellence. Pierce, who has been the driving force behind the oil and gas program at Washburn Law since its inception nearly a quarter of a century ago, is the Center’s director, and says the Center structure will allow Washburn Law to more effectively attract students, obtain grants and other financial support for Center programs, and attract alumni and other oil and gas lawyers to assist with the Center’s educational mission.

“Because of our program’s solid history and our desire to truly meet the needs of a changing industry, we have one of the most extensive oil and gas law programs in the nation,” Pierce says. He points to Washburn’s use of full-time tenured professors who teach program-related courses.

Practicing oil and gas lawyers, many of whom are alumni while others are dedicated friends of Washburn Law, volunteer their time for the Mineral Title Examination course, topical symposiums, and other special events that provide Washburn Law students with additional training without additional costs. Oil and gas law, as an elective field of study, has always enjoyed a strong student following. Washburn has a rapidly growing group of alumni who practice oil and gas law.

“One of the major factors that will distinguish a Washburn Law grad from others is that they will have taken several classes specifically focusing on oil and gas,” Pierce noted. “I’ve had employers tell me that’s a huge plus, because not only does it validate that the student has an interest in the subject matter but the student also has a substantial amount of background in the area the minute they start working. It may take years for their competitors to gain the same level of knowledge,” he said.

“Most students in the program end up with over 100 hours of CLE that we have provided to them beyond the classroom,” Pierce estimates. “That sort of environment is really important, is really healthy, and it gives the students more connection with the alumni, the business community, the practicing bar, the judiciary—everybody,” he added.

Going the extra mile—or 600 miles in Pierce’s case—for students is not unusual at Washburn Law. Students taking the Mineral Title Examination course in 2012 attended the Rocky Mountain Mineral Law Foundation's Mineral Title Examination special institute in Denver, at no charge to them, where they received invaluable experience, including the opportunity to network with legal professionals and potential future employers.

“We also make it possible for 1Ls to become actively involved in oil and gas law from the moment they arrive at Washburn,” Pierce explains. “Through our oil and gas law lecture series, student travel programs, and unique curriculum, 1Ls can amass a fair amount of oil and gas law training by the time they seek out summer clerkships following their first year in law school. For example, just three months into law school I had several 1Ls who were learning about oil and gas law at the Rocky Mountain Mineral Law Foundation’s Horizontal Oil & Gas Development special institute.”

According to the Kansas Independent Oil and Gas Association, the Kansas oil and gas industry ranks third in the nation for oil and gas exploration. This gives Washburn Law prime access to the industry, its leaders, and experts, many of whom routinely visit Washburn Law, mentoring students and providing hands-on practice.

“It’s not uncommon to have lawyers working hand-in-hand with our students imparting knowledge and offering expertise,” Pierce explained. He shared a favorite

Charles S. Fisher Jr., bs ’49 and jd ’51, had a passion for life that he demonstrated throughout his career as a top trial attorney, as an adjunct professor, as a military man, and as an outdoorsman and dedicated family man. A native Topekan, Fisher earned a bachelor’s degree in political science from Washburn University in 1949. He pursued his passion for debate and moot court while attending Washburn Law, activities which he said contributed to his successful career as a litigator. He also served on the Washburn Law Journal Board of Editors in 1951.

After earning his law degree, Fisher refined his skills in the courtroom and became one of Kansas’ preeminent trial attorneys. He was listed in every edition of Best Lawyers in America under the category of Personal Injury for Plaintiff during his many years of practice.

Fisher generously volunteered his time to help others, and for approximately 13 years taught Evidence and Trial Practice at Washburn Law. “I had such respect for adjunct faculty and was honored to be asked to join them,” Fisher said in a previous interview.

He thoroughly enjoyed his role in bringing practical experience to the classroom. “Keeping students challenged and interested were the most challenging aspects of teaching,” he had said. He often told his students that having a law degree does not in and of itself make a qualified lawyer and that total preparation and integrity are the keys to being a good lawyer. “A passion for the profession and for integrity is essential,” he had said.

Fisher deeply enjoyed life with his wife, Ella Marie, who also attended Washburn University, and with their blended family in Topeka and at their home in the Ocean Reef Club, Key Largo, Fla. The family includes Charles’ three sons, Michael, Mark, and Charles III, and four daughters, Cheryl Cailteux, Linda Spencer, aa ’90, Janet Webster, and Anita Longoria. The association with Washburn continued with Ella Marie’s daughters, Vicki Peterson, ba ’64, and husband, Gary, bba ’63, jd ’76; Kay Mettner and husband, Randy, ba ’70 and jd ’75; Sue Bolley, b ed ’91; and Cindy Sundgren.

After more than 50 years as a member of the Kansas Bar, Fisher retired in 2004 as a partner with the prestigious Topeka law firm of Fisher, Cavanaugh, Smith & Lemon PA. He was respected by his peers and served as president of both the Topeka Bar Association and of the Kansas Chapter of the American Board of Trial Advocates.

Charles died on Oct. 26, 2007, and Ella Marie passed away on Oct. 28, 2011. Now, with the assistance of daughter and son-in-law Vicki and Gary Peterson, the Charles S. Fisher Jr., and Ella Marie Fisher Law Scholarship at the Washburn University School of Law has been funded.
